She called my attention to low beacon mt. ran down to the n. end of the bridge, and recognized that another spine of it ran down to the flour-mill, which she recognized as up. of us. That mt. is Tipulhiik.

We then drove ~~to~~ up the s. side of the river to the gold Hill waterworks dam fall, ~~for~~ Reached it & parked the car betw. rd. & river, on very edge of a high bank of stuff almost as hard as puddingstone. She recognized the place as the fall, & located the story chain at the s. edge of the river, at foot of this bluff.

The river eats away this bluff all the time. She sd. that the canal of the flour mill took water out of the river & led it around the n. bank, & ~~was~~ that had made the ~~fall~~ channel dry where the falls were. But Mr. Cook said the falls were unaffected by the dam, & the same as they used to be, in a channel somewhat out in the river from the S. bank and reached only by crossing on a slippery plank & then going dr. over some rocks, is the main fall.

Geo. Baker went to it and said there is a seat there, like a place shaped to the two buttocks of a very large fat man, with places below to put one's feet, and a notch at the side for putting the pole of a dipnet, and facing a little up. of straight towards a good fishing eddy, just below the best fall. I called attention to Geo. sitting on the stone & Molly and Evelyn got a good look at him.

When we told Molly about the chain which Geo. had found, she said that is a different one. She explained in clear words that the chain that she saw is a portable one, not attached to a big bedrock, but you cd. lift it up, it was ~~like~~ a portable blue-colored rock, and had a groove at the left side of the ~~rock~~ chain into which groove the pole of the ~~fish~~ dipnet wd. be inserted to hold it while the fisherman went to dinner. Walker explained to Molly. The rock was down the bank at the edge of the river, one did not have to cross water to go to the chain. But the chain that Geo. Baker found is a seat in bedrock with groove on it, and has to be reached by crossing a channel of the winter.

Molly called our attention to the house pits along the river bank s. of the Tilo-mi-kh falls, and that the bank had ~~partly~~ eaten the riverward edge of these pits away. This was Walker's rancheria — she did not see the houses but was told they had been there. She heard that there is another Similian ra. across the river, on n. bank.
